Batters Begin to Bat and Pitchers to Pitch Much to Jennings's Joy.

COVELESKIE A FACTOR IN BRACE OF TEAM

Frank Gilhooley Improves His Hitting—Bean Ball Stirs Up Trouble.

By FRANK O'NEILL.

The rush of the Detroit Tigers is the topic of interest in baseball affairs for June. Entering this month the Juggernauts found themselves enmeshed in sixth place, with a pale and enemic average of .450, after struggling to eighteen victories in forty games.

Various reasons were assigned for the inability of the Tigers to win. Critics looked in vain for a plausible alibi; the team which was so strong on paper failed to come through on the field. When Sam Crawford was benched a howl of criticism was raised, but Jennings remained firm in his purpose, and developments have justified his actions.

Jennings sought carefully and well for the combination to make his team win. How well he has succeeded is told by the cold, uncompromising figures. In June, with its rain storms and post-nominals, the Tigers found themselves with a rush. The batters began to bat, the pitchers began to pitch, and the fields to field.

A Big Surprise.

The Eastern clubs entered Detroit smacking their lips in anticipation of a feast of Tiger flesh that was never served. The New York Yankees won the solitary distinction of defeating the cohorts of Jennings. The Senators, the Red Sox and the Athletics stepped up and took their beating with what grace was possible. Between June 1 and June 25, seventeen games were played, and of these fourteen were won, which is an average of .524 and considered fair enough in any man's country.

The pitching staff, which simply refused to round into condition in the early months of the season, came to with a rush, and life for the opposition was one exhibition of blinding speed and flashing courage. The pitchers, George Davis and Harry Coveleskie were the leaders in this stirring advance to the top, and to Coveleskie belongs the honor of pitching the team to all critical moments on June 21. Both he and Davis won four games.

Dubuc put two to a kill, while Cunningham, the young spit-baller, and Hummel, the left-hander, got the best of the other two games won after several pitchers had been used.

The Tigers are leading the league in club hitting. Burns, Cobb, Heilmann, French and some of the strong ones are up near the top, and the god of battles is generally on the side that totes the heaviest artillery.

When talking of players who have made good in the face of criticism, the name of Frank Gilhooley, the little outfielder of the Yankees, suggests itself. When Frank was first called up, the minor leaguers were willing to bear with him for a while, but later, when his bat failed to propel the ball to any distance whatever, he was slated for the minor leagues. But he hit the ball hard, he stands beside his batting average of .275 and says to the club with pardonable pride. He has climbed from the ranks of the 250 hitters in a month or so, and that is going some.

Gilhooley, incidentally, has refuted another argument. It was said that his arm was too strong, enough to field to head runners off at third on balls hit into right. In the early weeks of the season his arm was tested by the batters of the Yankees, but he stood the test splendidly, and now he is treated with almost the same respect that Jack Murray received when he was in his heyday.

The practice of shifting left and right handed batters according to the pitching has met with its degree of criticism here and there, and it is worth noting the results and that is what counts in any game. Take, for example, the Smith-Roth combination, of Cleveland. Both are hitting up around .400 mark, and the former is right-handed, and the latter is left-handed, and they are cracking the ball at timely moments. They are two perfectly good reasons for the position of the Indians.

On the other hand, there is Chick Galloway. He is not clouting the ball hard, but he is having a lot of luck in coming up with men on third and being able to score with them after a long lay-off. Galloway is a right-hander, and there are many men of Galloway's stamp. He does not rank high in the averages, but he gets the runs over. It is because of this that a change in the scoring rule is contemplated. In the new analysis there is little to choose between the hitter who gets them over on a fly and the man who gets them over on a ground ball. The result is the change.

Charges that pitchers are making deliberate use of the bean ball are flying thick and fast in the American League. The accusing finger has been pointed at the hurlers of the Boston Red Sox, in the opinion of the majority it is high time that the solons of baseball took a decided stand in this matter and promulgated a ruling by which power was given to the umpire to punish the pitcher who deliberately throws a fast ball that cracks sharply at a batter and the deliberate use of the bean ball to drive a nervous man from the box. A pitcher declared guilty of the use of this unfair, if not illegal, delivery should be fined and suspended.

To be sure, in the majority of cases the hitting of a batter is due to accident, but just so long as one pitcher is accused of making use of such unsportsmanlike tactics the batters should be protected. Imagine, man, the Walter Johnson, Jeff Pfeffer, the Brooklyn giant, standing up on the mound and deliberately trying to shoot his fast one at a batter's head. The Cardinals, who are on the head with a pitched ball and has been given a short reprieve. He was forced to take a short trip to the minor leagues because of his time in the pen. We saw Walter Johnson almost kill Jack Martin on the old American League grounds several years ago. Roger Bresnahan was hit and almost killed. There was an exceptional man, with rare physical courage. When he recovered he plunged right into the game as if nothing had happened. But many a good man has been driven out of the game by being hit.

Governor John Kinley Tener, president of the National League, is bitterly opposed to the use of the bean ball and would gladly see it put in ruling it right out of the game. He said the other day, when talking of

HOME RUNS FEATURE VICTORY OF BRAVES

Phillies Make Errors That Mean Runs—Compton Chief Offender.

Philadelphia, June 24.—Home runs and errors figured in the game in which Boston defeated Philadelphia today, 4 to 2.

One of the home team's runs was largely due to an error by Compton. The other three hits were made off Demaree in seven innings, but two of these came in the fourth, when Ketchy's home run also sent in Compton, while error helped Boston to get the other two tallies.
